ON THE WILD EDGE: HUNTING FOR A NATURAL LIFE

Synopsis: In 1980, David and Caroline Petersen packed what little they owned into a VW bus and fled urban life in California for the Rocky Mountains of Colorado. Thus began this adventurous couple's lifelong immersion in a simple, independent existence balanced precariously between nature and culture. Accompanying David on his annual hunt for a winter's supply of meat, On the Wild Edge provides inspiration for all who desire to lead an intentional life.

"My hope for this film," says Belgian filmmaker Christopher Daley, "is that it captures the Petersens' exemplary commitment to living honest, uncluttered lives not merely 'close to nature,' but as active players in wild nature."

On the Wild Edge: Hunting for a Natural Life is a quiet and dignified film, which, like David Petersen's acclaimed writing on nature, hunting and the human condition, swims upstream and defies categorization, being both 'a hunting film' whose strongest appeal is to non-hunters, and the poignant story of one thoughtful man's efforts to confront existential angst by studying in the school of wild nature.

I invite you to view and review this unique film.
